Dear Jose

ISP can confirm that the ISO performance and in-water requirements are the same as the EN in-water requirements. The design of the bladder has not been changed since EN in order to obtain ISO approval. The inflators are both EN and ISO approved also.

It is therefore safe to assume that any testing conducted on the EN product would be valid for the ISO, and visa versa.

This product may be marked under various names accounting to customer requirements, in each case the product reference number will be as per the appropriate certificate and will remain unchanged.

As Such the Guardia Civil Lifejacket and the Armada Espanola lifejacket are the same lifejackets with different covers and logos. They meet the requirements of the certificates supplied and are produced to also meet the requirements of NM2934MG

Best regards
